

Just What is BBQe...?

There are many interpretation of the term "barbecue." Some use it to describe a social gathering and grilling outdoors. At the Back Alley Eatery, we use the term to describe our meat; slow-cooked, using oak and hickory wood smoke for the perfect flavor.

Barbecuing and grilling differ in that grilling is cooking over direct heat, usually a hot fire for a short time. Barbecuing is cooking with wood smoke, using indirect heat, lower temperatures and longer cooking times. The distinction between barbecuing and grilling is the heat source, temperature and cooking time. It's the smoke from the burning wood that gives barbecue its unique flavor. You can't BBQe with gas.

Some areas of the country baste the cooking meat with vinegar or use a mustard based sauce. Others use a dry rub, or the more common tomato based sauces. At the Back Alley Eatery, we season our meat with a light rub, smoke to perfection and serve with barbecue sauces on the side for your individual taste.
